The song and video feature an all-star diverse cast, including Gus Kenworthy, Sarah Michelle Gellar, Hayley Kiyoko, Vincint, and LGBTQ+ ally (and co-founder of cannabis consumption lounge Fantom Flower) Patricia Arquette, and are joined by top drag performers from season 14 of RuPaul’s Drag Race: Kornbread, Kerri Colby, Jorgeous, as well as newly crowned winner, Willow Pill. Grammy award-winning singer-songwriter-producer MNEK is also a featured vocalist on the song.

be if we submit to narratives of LGBTQ+ erasure. In a world where ‘Don’t Say Gay’ is gaining momentum, we’re excited to promote a utopia of queer joy.”

Weedmaps will serve as a premier destination to find Cann’s newest and historical flavors and offers the opportunity to discover and engage with LGBTQ+ owned cannabis businesses through the platform. In Weedmaps’ “2021: Cannabis in America” report, studies found that only 13% of cannabis consumers know if their cannabis retailer reflects a specific ownership type, such as LGBTQ+, but more than 37% say they want to shop with LGBTQ+-owned cannabis businesses.

“The LGBTQ+ community has been at the forefront of many significant moments in history that have brought the cannabis industry to where it is today, and with our mission to promote inclusivity within the cannabis economy, it was a natural decision to collaborate with Cann on this pride campaign,” said Juanjo Feijoo, CMO of Weedmaps. “We share a similar vision and understand the importance of standing up for this community to ensure everyone feels welcome and accepted in the cannabis industry and empowered to grow their business. We’re excited to rally behind bold and impactful LGBTQ+ voices and advocates in an effort to further support and provide opportunity to this important community.”

The vibrant track “Taste So Good” was written by singer, songwriter and record producer Leland (who has produced for Troye Sivan, Selena Gomez and others) and draws inspiration from iconic love anthem Lady Marmalade, with each of the vocal talents having their own solo moment. The video was produced by world renowned music video production company London Alley (who has produced and directed for Lil Nas X, Doja Cat, Ariana Grande among others), directed by one of the top queer directors, Jake Wilson (who has directed for Lizzo, Cher and others), creative directed by Luke Anderson (Co-Founder of Cann) and queer creative collective House of Avalon (who style Lizzo, Symone and others) and supported by Elias Talbot (who was the DP for Industry Baby, WAP and others) with the support of London Alley’s branding incubator, Side Street.

“Our collaboration was a celebratory hybrid between the entertainment and marketing space,” said Brandon Bonfiglio, Executive Producer, London Alley. “We leveraged the internal capabilities within London Alley, from song creation and distribution to music video execution, while incorporating major brands. It’s a thrilling look into the future of our industry, and I’m excited for what’s next.”

"We continue to see disparity in the cannabis space as it relates to the LGBTQ+ community and this campaign is aimed at changing that narrative and celebrating inclusivity and opportunity," said Jake Bullock, Co-Founder and CEO of Cann. "We're excited to work with Weedmaps, a partner that is equally passionate about advancing the cannabis industry in these areas. That means looking at many of the problems and challenges our industry faces, including social equity, transparency, and inclusivity, and working to tackle them head on."
